

Fionn O'Neill

CRWR 110

“Biography”

January 27, 2025

Biography

Long Version:

Fionn O'Neill is a lifelong creative who's recently transferred to the Ringling College of Art and Design, entering his first year of the creative writing program. Growing up in the commercial town of Fort Myers—without much money to his family's name—he had very little to do except imagine. His work consists of flash-fiction, the pieces of which often serve as various metaphors for the experiences he's faced in his life. He's prone to crafting stories in myriad genres; from tales of horror that unsettle and disarm, to hopeful poetry that offers his unique perspective on life. On Fionn's website, you can find some of his poetry, like “Love, Periodically.” Along with his fictional works, you can view some of his academic papers, like “Substituting Substance.” Currently, Fionn is studying to receive his bachelor's degree in Creative Writing. He hopes to use this degree to pursue a career in the production of movies and television. Whatever Fionn ends up writing, you don't want to miss it.

Medium Version:

Fionn O'Neill is a lifelong creative who's recently transferred to the Ringling College of Art and Design, entering his first year of the creative writing program. Growing up in the commercial town of Fort Myers—without much money to his family's name—he had very little to do except imagine. His work consists of flash-fiction, the pieces of which often serve as various metaphors for the experiences he's faced in his life. He's prone to crafting stories in myriad genres; from tales of horror that unsettle and disarm, to hopeful poetry that offers his unique perspective on life.

Short Version:

Fionn O'Neill is a creative writing student at RCAD. To learn more about who he is, and the type of work he creates, visit his website here: www.fionnallthetime.com